THE THEATRES

POLI'S

"The Road to Yesterday."

Replete with magnificent scenic and costume effects, a replica of the original production as given for one year at the Herald Square Theatre, "The Road to Yesterday" that beautiful fantastical drama of mystery will be presented in its initial performance here by Poli's all-star stock company this afternoon. A special effort has been made by Mr. Poli to give his patrons in "The Road to Yesterday," one of the most superb productions ever staged in a stock season in Bridgeport. Final rehearsals were held yesterday and every member of the company presented indication of being thoroughly conversant with his or her part. A great truck load of scenery fresh from the studios of Mr. Poli's special scenic artist arrived yesterday. Under the able guidance of Director Socia every detail of the mammoth production has been given the closest attention. Miss Alice Fleming has been cast for the role of Elspeth, made famous by Minnie Dupree and others of the company have been allotted favorable parts. "The Road to Yesterday" a drama of fantasy will be found rich in picturesque situations and possessing an absolute novelty in plot and story. It was those points of distinction coupled with a strong company that made possible the phenomenal run of the piece at Herald Square. The story is a breath from fairy land, the theme being the reincarnation of the heroine, Elspeth, having fallen asleep in her boudoir Elspeth is transported back to a period 300 years prior. By dint of using elaborate stage effects, costly wardrobing, etc., the story is portrayed most realistically to the people across the footlights. Thrills there are in plenty during the action of the piece, and there is not a dull moment while the four acts are being presented. "The Road to Yesterday" is expected to prove one of the most talked of things in Bridgeport this week.

Aside from the splendid production special Poli features will enliven popular interest throughout the week. The latest pictorial melodies will be given by two talented singers who will draw from New York this morning. A feature that is sure to arouse much interest is the distribution of coupons at each performance during the week. The drawing of a handsome genuine diamond and gold-link bracelet which will take place on next Monday afternoon. The management has arranged to issue coupons at the entrance of the foyer. One half of the coupons will be torn off and deposited in a box, the other half of the coupons will be retained by the auditor. At Saturday's matinee some child patron will select from the box a full view of the audience. The number corresponding if held by some lady in the audience will win the handsome bracelet. The only condition placed upon the drawing is that the person possessing the lucky number must be in the audience. Then the award is made on Monday, May 24. The bracelet which is a beautiful affair set with seven large diamonds will be placed on exhibition to-day in some store window.

SMITH'S

Natural born comedians, Crimmins and Gore, in a splendid comedy act, "Like Mother Used to Make," will be the headliners this week. The comedy is bright and rip-roaring and the ludicrous situations cause one to laugh almost continuously. "Like Mother Used to Make" has a plot which serves as a medium for a lot of clever changes displaying varying talents.

Among the many choice attractions which will be offered on this week's bill is the exhibition of fine rifle marksmanship given by Myrtle Byrne, one of the most skillful woman performers ever appearing in public. Miss Byrne breaks glass balls held in the teeth, on the heads or even between the heads of her assistants, clips the fire from their cigarettes and cuts the clothing from one, and with an assistant plays a tune on the xylophone with shots.

One of the best comedy acrobatic acts extant is that of Hayes and Alpoint, the dwarf and the lanky tall man, whose circus queen act is a weird and side-splitting spectacle.

Edith Montrose, a character change artist will present an original and unique number, of a somewhat different type of acting from that usually seen on the stage. She makes her rapid changes of the different characters in full view of the audience.

Gardner & Golden, "those funny men in black," make the fifth of the offerings on this week's vaudeville bill, and if they do not keep the people laughing until their sides roll down their cheeks it will be because they have not lived up to their previous reputations.

The daily matinee begins promptly at 2:15 and the evening performances at 7:15, lasting continuously until about 10:30. You can drop-in at any time in the evening and stay as long as you please.

New pictures will be shown today, and other changes will come Wednesday and Friday. They will all be of the best.

CONVENTION OF NATIONAL SLAVONIC SOCIETY BRINGS THOUSANDS TO BRIDGEPORT

The National Slavonic Society which opens its convention in this city today is one of the chief institutional representatives of a people whose emigration to this country dates back not more than 25 years, and who yet are owners of much property, especially in real estate. In Bridgeport the Slovaks number among their people many tax payers, and others who are industrious and worthy citizens.

There are 27,000 members of the National Slavonic Society, which numbered just 250 back in 1890, when the first convention was held in Pittsburgh, and but six delegates attended. Now there are over 600 assemblies, and every assembly is entitled to send a delegate to the convention.

Since its organization the society has paid over five millions of dollars in death benefits. It is patterned after the benevolent organizations of this country, paying in case of the death of a member $1,000; a member who loses his wife, receives $300; for the loss of an arm, he receives $100; for the loss of a foot, he receives $50. A member who loses one foot and one hand, or both hands, or both feet, or sight of both eyes, receives $1,000. In three years, from 1906 to 1909, ending March 31, the society paid over $300,000 in sick benefits and nearly $1,000,000 in death claims.

The Slovaks and Ruthenians of Hungary have numbers of benevolent, religious and literary organizations of all kinds in this country, but none has attained such a splendid record as the National Slavonic Society.

An interesting feature of the rules of the society is the requirement that every member must become a citizen within six years after his membership is granted.

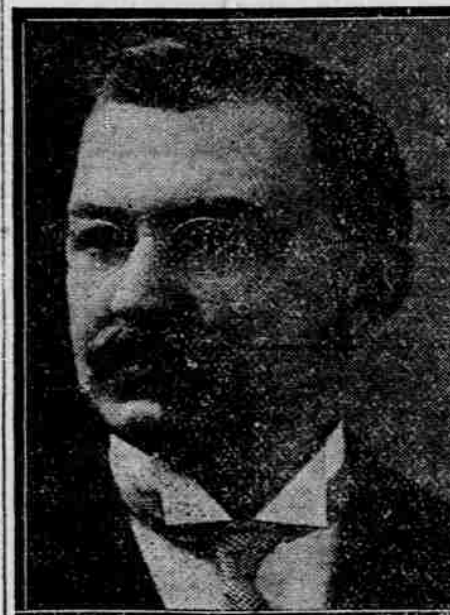

The society has been conservatively governed. Its officers hope to have 50,000 men within its ranks before the end of another year. They will be received on the broad platform of the society, whose plan is not to interfere with the religious beliefs of any of its members, but to institute a patriotic regard for the adopted country.

This will be the first convention of the society ever held in this city, but it is thought that it may not be the last. The Slovak population of Bridgeport is growing annually. The city has thousands of members among the strikers in the coal regions, and it has been drawn into the controversy between capital and labor. An innocent member is lodged in the penitentiary, and it was only two months ago that this society saved, through its help, an innocent man from the gallows in this State.

While the society attends to life and liability insurance just like any other business corporation in the country, it is not unmindful of the opportunities, the responsibilities and the duties that it has as the greatest organized body of Slovaks in this country or abroad. Many are those who look to it for guidance and assistance. Literature in the Slovak tongue is scant and it must be encouraged. Purses must be raised occasionally for journalists who defy the government at Buda Pest and who are imprisoned. Poor Slovak students who are denied higher education in Hungary, and must seek it outside, require annual stipends, while useful reading matter must be printed and circulated to educate the raw immigrant.

An unjustified attack is made on the Slovak people, someone must step forward to explain, and there is none as interested as this society. The so-

Thus, it will be seen, the society acts in many roles, besides paying sick and death benefits—as a friend of the sick brother, the guardian of the brave patriots, families, peacekeeper between quarreling brothers, arbitrator of strikes, and educator of the ambitious Slovak youth, a defender of the brave patriots who fight for their rights in the old country, a conservator of the native language, a promoter of American citizenship among its people, indefatigable and true to the best interests of its members.
